BAHAMAS HAVE MET UNIQUE PROBLEM IN PRESENT WAR PERIOD

Before the War Islanders Used Nearly All Imported Food; They Are Now Forced to Use That Grown on the Island.

NASSAU, Bahama Islands, British West Indies, Nov. 6.—Though properly a part of the British West Indies, the Bahama Islands have faced problems peculiar to themselves as a result of the European war, notably the problem of providing their own foodstuffs, whereas, prior to the war, they had relied almost entirely upon imports.

Unlike the islands to the south, the Bahamas have neither the soil nor the climate for the free growth of tropical fruits, though some, of course, are grown. The chief product here has been sponge and next to that, of late years, sisal for fibre. The growing of other products has been small, mainly because so many of the male population are engaged in the sponge industry, but there is also this factor, that the islanders have an exceptional tendency to buy foreign or imported food rather than accept the home-grown products, even when the latter are superior. For instance, women and children and some of the men grow sisal for fibre and clean it by hand, and dress and sew it—root of hand, and spend the few cents they have earned in this laborious undertaking in the purchase of foreign foodstuffs that pay a duty of 25 per cent. This tendency has been encouraged and made the most of by the merchants as it increased their trade, and also by the government as it gave so much more revenue.

In view of these facts, when the war in Europe began and the big sponge export to England was entirely stopped and the fibre industry was also hit hard, the Bahamas found themselves in the position of producing practically nothing that was saleable, while, on the other hand, the price of imported food products that the people had been relying on to such an extent, rapidly advanced.

The government in view of the decreasing revenues decided to cut down expenditures, but this took the form of suspending public works entirely rather than making the slightest retrenchments in official salaries. More hardship was made for all classes when the banks put up interest two per cent and raised the rate of exchange to two per cent, and with the government's increase of two per cent in the tariff, there was such an effect as only a region so dependent on imports as the Bahamas, could understand.

There was hope that the winter tourist business would offset some of the other losses, but after a considerable expense in putting hotels and boarding houses in repair it was discovered that instead of increasing, the tourist business also fell off.

Outside observers remarked that in the face of so much depression, the uncomplaining spirit with which the islanders have faced the hardships has been remarkable. In addition to this, the people came forward with generous contributions to various war funds, and with a grant from the treasury, some $75,000 was raised. The women of the islands have, after a year of work, not slackened in their sewing for war purposes. As a further indication of patriotism in the islands, there is now on foot a movement to enlist, equip and train 150 men for service at the front.

In respect to the local food problem, it may be recalled that soon after the war began the governor of the islands called a mass meeting at the capital and advised the people to go to the soil and grow foodstuffs. This advice was so well taken that a complaint is heard from the merchants that trade is dull, that the people have grown so much corn and other home products that there is now little sale for imports.
